

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY
FOOD – VIRGINIA
:60
EXPIRATION: 10/31/2007

VO: If there was an emergency, would your family have enough water and non-perishable food to last three days? We asked families across the country. Here are some of their answers.

LIZETTE: Well, we depend mostly on our meats and our refrigerator. On, you know, cooking that way. So most of our foods are in the refrigerator. Once the electricity goes out, your refridger ... refrigerator goes out, so you can only use that for a certain amount of time.

SAL: We usually eat fresh food daily.

VAL: You know, in the pantry we have like granola bars and canned tomatoes, you know... uh...

SAL: That's true, but that's really not survival food... tomato paste.

MR. BAZZA: The brand of dog food that I do purchase for the dogs, as well as the cats, are edible by humans. We could even share the same bowl.

MRS. BAZZA: I want my own bowl.

MR. BAZZA: You get your own bowl.

VO: Is your plan any better? To learn more about making an emergency plan, visit ReadyVirginia.gov. Brought to you by the Commonwealth of Virginia, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security and the Ad Council.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY
FOOD – VIRGINIA
:30
EXPIRATION: 10/31/2007

VO: If there was an emergency, would your family have enough water and non-perishable food to last three days? We asked families across the country. Here are some of their answers.

SAL: We usually eat fresh food daily.

VAL: In the pantry we have canned tomatoes... uh...

SAL: That's really not survival food... tomato paste.

MR. BAZZA: The brand of dog food that I do purchase are edible by humans.

VO: Is your plan any better? To learn more about making an emergency plan, visit ReadyVirginia.gov. Brought to you by the Commonwealth of Virginia, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security and the Ad Council.